MUSHER FOUNDATION, INC.,

Petitioner-Plaintiff, vs.

ALBA TRADING CO., INC.,

Respondent-Defendant.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Petitioner, Musher Foundation, Inc., respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a judgment of said court entered April 10, 1942, (R. 35) affirming a decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, dismissing a second cause of action on an amended complaint for lack of jurisdiction because there was no allegation of diverse citizenship between the parties to the suit.

I. Summary and Statement of Matter Involved.

The Plaintiff, Musher Foundation, Inc., brought suit against Alba Trading Co., and in its amended complaint alleged:

(1) For a first cause of action, that the Defendant by manufacturing and selling "Olive Infused Corn Oil" under the brand name "Bertola" infringed three patents, Nos. 2,069,265, 2,199,364 and 2,221,404, belonging to Plaintiff, which patents cover "Olive Infused Corn Oil" and processes for producing the same by treatment of the corn oil with a sufficient amount of olive paste to prevent rancidity.

(2) For a second cause of action that the Defendant infringed Plaintiff's common law rights in the words "Infused", "Infusing" and "Infusion" and was guilty of unfair competition with Plaintiff by embodying in Defendant's advertising and applying to its containers for the sale of oil the words "Infused", "Infusing" and "Infusion" which had acquired a secondary meaning indicating the product that had been made in accordance with Plaintiff's patents above referred to.

The Petitioner-Plaintiff and the Respondent-Defendant are both New York corporations and there is no diversity of citizenship. Jurisdiction of the Federal Court as to the first cause of action arose under the patent laws of the United States while as to the second cause of action jurisdiction only arose because the same acts and facts as constituted the acts of patent infringement under the first cause of action also constituted acts of unfair competition on the part of the Defendant as against the Plaintiff.

The Honorable John W. Clancy, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York, on December 26, 1941, upon motion by the Defendant dismissed the second cause of action relating to the unfair competition arising out of the same acts as constituted the acts of patent infringement upon the grounds:

(a) that said second cause of action failed to state a claim against the Defendant upon which relief could be granted, and

(b) that the Court lacked jurisdiction, there being no diversity of citizenship between Plaintiff and Defendant.

This ruling of Judge Clancy dismissing the second cause of action upon the ground that the Court lacked jurisdiction in the absence of diversity of citizenship was contrary to the ruling of this Court in Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, and is also contrary to other interpretations of this decision by other judges in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and other United States District Courts in other parts of the country.

Among these cases which interpret the ruling of Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, contrariwise to the interpretation of Judge Clancy are

(a) Matchiabelli v. Anhalt, 40 Fed. Supp. 848, Judge Coxe, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York;

(b) Ross v. Neuville, 34 F. Supp. 466, 467, Judge Campbell, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of New York; and

(c) Joyce, Inc., v. Fern Shoe Co. et al., 32 F. Supp. 401, 406, United States Court for the Southern District of California.

In each of these last mentioned cases the District Court relying upon this Court's decision in Hurn v. Oursler, 289

U. S. 238, reached a diametrically opposite result from that arrived at by Judge Clancy.

The decision of the District Court then was appealed by the Plaintiff.

In the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, the Circuit Judges disagreed, Judges Swan and Augustus N. Hand agreeing with Judge Clancy's interpretation of Hurn v. Oursler and Judge Clark agreeing with the interpretations of contrary cases.

The majority of the Circuit Court of Appeals held that the Court had no jurisdiction over the acts of unfair competition because of the lack of diversity of citizenship, while the minority held that the Court did have such jurisdiction where the acts of unfair competition were substantially the same acts as gave rise to the first cause of action in patent infringement.

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit modified the decision of Judge Clancy however in deciding that the second cause of action set forth sufficient facts to constitute a case of unfair competition so that this question is not involved upon this petition.

Therefore, this petition presents an important question of wide and general interest involving the proper interpretation of this Court's decision in Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238.

II. Jurisdiction.

(a) The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under paragraph 240 (a) of the Judicial Code as amended by the Act of Feb. 13, 1925, 28 U. S. C. 347(a), and under Judicial Code 262, 28 U. S. C. 377.

(b) The judgment or decree dated April 10, 1942.

III. Questions Presented.

Whether an act of unfair competition in selling a can of "Olive Infused Corn Oil" with a deceptive and misleading label likely to cause palming off the product of defendant as a product of plaintiff, when it also constitutes an act of patent infringement, should not be considered by the United States District Court having jurisdiction over the parties under the patent laws of the United States, where the patents involved cover both the "Olive Infused Corn Oil" sold in unfair competition as well as the process by which it has been made.

IV. Reasons Relied On for Allowance of the Writ.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in this case (127 F. (2d) 9) shows an irreconcilable conflict not only between the majority and the minority of the judges who dissented but as to other decisions and opinions both of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (see also Treasure Imports, Inc., v. Armidur, et al., 127 F. (2d) 3, and Pure Oil Co. v. Puritan, 127 F. (2d) 6) and other courts as to the proper interpretation of the Supreme Court's decision in Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238.

The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals which has already been reported at 127 F. (2d) 9 fully sets forth this conflict in the majority and minority opinions so that no brief in support of this petition appears to be necessary.

WHEREFORE, your petitioner respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari be issued out of and under the seal of this Court directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit commanding the said court to certify and send to this Court on a day to be designated, a full transcript of the record and all proceedings of said

Circuit Court of Appeals in the case numbered and entitled on its docket "No. 212, October term 1941, Musher Foundation, Inc., plaintiff-appellant vs. Alba Trading Co., Inc., defendant-appellee", to the end that this case may be reviewed and determined by this Court; that the judgment of said Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit be reversed; and that petitioner be granted such other and further relief as to this Honorable Court may seem meet and proper.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR CERTIORARI.

Preface.

There is no basis for the instant petition unless this Court is prepared to rule that once a federal court has assumed jurisdiction over a federal cause of action, that then it will assume jurisdiction of any separate and distinct non-federal cause of action which is joined in the same complaint.

POINT I.

The District Court lacked jurisdiction to entertain the subject-matter pleaded in the second cause of action.

If the phrase "single cause of action" as used in Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, 246, and "one cause of action" as used in Armstrong Co. v. Nu-Enamel Corp., 305 U. S.

315, 324, mean what they imply, it would be a misnomer to speak of this action for patent infringement and unfair competition as a single or one cause of action.

“Patent infringement and unfair competition in trade are separate causes of action, distinct in their nature. There are essential differences between them. Patent infringement is the violation of an exclusive monopoly created by statute. No element of monopoly is necessary or involved in unfair competition. The doctrine of unfair competition does not forbid or discountenance the manufacture or sale by any one of articles belonging to the class constituting the subject of such competition. It merely prohibits a fraudulent or wrongful placing of the articles on the market in such manner or dress as to deceive or be calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that such articles were manufactured or prepared and directly or indirectly placed on the market by persons other than those practicing such unfair competition. The essence of the doctrine is that no one is to be allowed fraudulently to palm off upon the public his goods as those of another. The establishment of unfair competition requires proofs and the application of principles radically different from those necessary to support a charge of patent infringement. What is necessary to constitute an act of infringement lacks some of the essential elements of unfair competition.”

Judge Bradford in

Unit Const. Co. v. Huskey Mfg. Co., 241 Fed. 129, at p. 131 (D. C., E. D. Pa., 1917).

Although the decision in Hurn v. Oursler, supra, disposed of the conflicting conclusions reached by the various Circuit Courts of Appeals as to the right of the district court to assume jurisdiction and laid down a rule for courts to follow, in no event can the point be raised here that unfair competition may only be incidental to the relief for patent infringement (which is sometimes alleged as an aggravation of damages), for the plaintiff can recover no damages in this suit, having failed to allege a compliance with Section 49 of Title 35 of the United States Code.

Dunlap v. Schofield, 152 U. S. 244 (1894);
Franklin Brass & Foundry Co. v. Shapiro & Aronson, Inc., 278 Fed. 435 (C. C. A. 3, 1921).

In the second cause of action, plaintiff sought an injunction and damages arising from defendant's unfair competition and infringement of a common-law trade name or trade-mark allegedly owned by the plaintiff.

There being no diversity of citizenship, the Court would have no jurisdiction of the action for unfair competition.

Zenie Bros. v. Miskend, 10 Fed. Supp. 779 (D. C., S. D. N. Y., 1935).

In the case of

Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 236, at 246 (1933), this Court held, that to permit plaintiff to combine a federal with a non-federal cause of action where there is no diversity of citizenship the acts alleged must arise out of:

"identical facts as to be little more than the equivalent of different epithets to characterize the same group of circumstances."

To determine whether there has been compliance with the above rule the Courts have adopted various tests, the most important of which are:

(1) The federal and non-federal causes must be so pleaded as to constitute one cause of action.

Judge Mack said in

Southern Pacific Co. v. Van Hoosear, 72 Fed. (2d) 903, at 912 (C. C. A. 9, 1934):

“* * * The Oursler case seems to be the first in which the Supreme Court has applied the cause of action test to this jurisdictional problem.”

Or as was said in

Armstrong Co. v. Nu-Enamel Corp., 305 U. S. 315, at 324 (1938):

“Once properly obtained, the jurisdiction of the one cause of action * * * persists to deal with all grounds supporting it * * *.” (Italics ours.)

(2) There must be concurrence of evidence, i. e., the identical evidence requisite to prove the federal cause of action must prove the non-federal cause of action.

Hurn v. Oursler, supra, at p. 246;

Armstrong v. Nu-Enamel Corp., supra, at p. 325;

Lewis v. Vendome Bags, 108 Fed. (2d) 16 (C. C. A. 2, 1939);

Southern Pacific Co. v. Van Hoosear, 72 Fed. (2d) 903, at 912 (C. C. A. 9, 1934).

The complaint at bar fails to meet these requirements. In this case the evidence necessary to prove the cause of action for patent infringement is neither identical with nor substantially similar to the evidence requisite for unfair competition.

The essence of unfair competition is the sale of the goods of one vendor for those of another.

Armstrong v. Nu-Enamel, 305 U. S. 315, at 336 (1938);

Kellogg Co. v. National Biscuit Co., 305 U. S. 111, at 120 (1938);

Lewis v. Vendome Bags, 109 Fed. (2d) 16, at 18 (C. C. A. 2, 1939).

So that to have "identical facts" as is required by the rule of Hurn v. Oursler the infringement of the patent must arise from the sale of the product.

It is a well established rule of law that:

"A mere sale of the product of a process does not constitute an infringement of a process patent."

Snell v. Potters, 88 Fed. (2d) 611, at 612 (C. C. A. 2, 1937);

In re Amtorg Trading Corp., 75 Fed. (2d) 826, at 832 (C. C. P. A. 1935), Cert. denied 296 U. S. 576.

This leaves for consideration only the question of infringement of the products covered by the patents in question.

In order for this plaintiff to bring itself within the rule that identical evidence must prove both the federal and non-federal causes of action, it must appear that the mere sale of the patented product itself and no more constitutes unfair competition and patent infringement, and that these occur simultaneously. In other words, customers must be misled and the public must be confused by the infringing product itself. The product of the patent here is an imitation olive oil. The nature of the product is such as to preclude the possibility of the consuming public recognizing the product itself, apart from the container in which it is sold, as that of the plaintiff.

Electric Auto-Lite Co. v. P. & D. Mfg. Co., 109 Fed. (2d) 566 (C. C. A. 2, 1940).

Since the patents in suit relate to process and product claims of a substance which must be packaged before it is marketed, the sale of such a product cannot constitute at the same time both an act of patent infringement and unfair competition.

The plaintiff has recognized these limitations upon its action for unfair competition for in the complaint it is not alleged that customers are confused by the product (which is all that is protected by the patent), but by the label on the package (which is not protected).

The can in which this olive oil is sold and the lettering or marks thereon are separate entities, distinct and apart from the infringing product in the can. And any rights which the plaintiff may assert with reference to the can or the wording thereon are by the same token, separate and distinct and independent of any rights which it may have under its patents.

In cases involving trade-marks (Armstrong v. Nu-Enamel, supra), copyrights (Hurn v. Oursler, supra) and design patents (Lewis v. Vendome Bags, supra), it invariably follows that the sale of the infringing article constitutes at one and the same time both patent infringement and unfair competition. As was said in:

Armstrong v. Nu-Enamel, supra, at p. 325:

“The facts supporting a suit for infringement [of a trade-mark] and one for unfair competition are substantially the same.” (Language in brackets supplied.)

In the case of:

Prince Matchabelli, Inc., v. Anhalt & Co., 40 Fed. Supp. 848 (D. C., S. D. N. Y., 1941), which plaintiff said in the Court below involved a constructional patent, Judge Coxe said at page 849:

“The claims cover not only the completed purse kit, but also the method of putting it together.”

From the above statement by the Court, it can be seen that, if the patent was a constructional patent, it was the design that was embodied in the construction of the product manufactured under the patent that brought it within the rule laid down in the Hurn case (supra).

Plaintiff has also cited

Ross v. Newville, 34 Fed. Supp. 466 (D. C., E. D. N. Y., 1940);

Joyce, Inc., v. Fern Shoe Co., et al., 32 Fed. Supp. 401 (D. C., S. D. Cal., 1940).

The Ross case involved a registered trade-mark. What has already been said in this brief concerning trade-mark cases is equally applicable to the Ross case.

Joyce, Inc., v. Fern Shoe Co. is in every respect similar to Prince Matchabelli, Inc., v. Anhalt, supra. This will appear from an examination of the patent involved in the Joyce case which is discussed in Joyce, Inc., v. Solnit, 29 Fed. Supp. 787 (D. C., S. D. Cal., 1939). In the latter case the same Judge said:

“We are not dealing with a method of shoe construction.

• • • • •

“In other words, we have a shoe of particular construction.”

This construction was embodied in the physical appearance of the finished shoe. The defendant's sale of such a shoe could, therefore, constitute both patent infringement and unfair competition simultaneously.

In

Lewis v. Vendome Bags, 108 Fed. (2d) 16 (1939), certiorari denied 309 U. S. 660 the Circuit Court for the Second Circuit had before it a case involving an infringement of a design patent and unfair competition. At the trial the former charge was not proved. What was proved was unfair competition with bags not embodying the patented design. It was held that the complaint should have been dismissed for failure to prove the unfair competition alleged. At page 17 the Court said:

“While usually a variance between pleading and proof may be corrected by an amendment to conform the bill to the proof, this, we think, is not permissible where the effect of the amendment is to allege a cause of action beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. Had the plaintiff pleaded the facts developed upon the trial, the bill would have charged (1) infringement of the patent and (2) unfair competition in respect to bags of an unpatented design. The latter charge sets up a separate, distinct and non-federal cause of action, as did the claim of unfair competition in respect to the uncopyrighted revision of the plaintiff's play in Hurn v. Oursler, supra, 289 U. S. 248.” (Italics ours.)

The plaintiff's unfair competition action is based entirely upon the defendant's use of the word “INFUSED” on its packages. It appears from paragraph 12 of the complaint that it is the name “INFUSED” as used on a package and not the product of the patent which has “acquired a secondary meaning as indicating in the trade and to the public a product produced under the supervision of and having the seal of approval of the plaintiff herein.”

It is clear that under the patents the plaintiff acquired no rights to the word “INFUSED” or to the packages in which the product is sold. The evidence required to prove the unfair competition arising from the use of the word “INFUSED” would therefore be irrelevant to proof of the patent infringement action, and, conversely, the patent infringement testimony would be irrelevant in the unfair competition action.

It has been held that where the facts required to prove the non-federal cause of action are irrelevant to proof of the federal cause of action, that then they do not arise out of the same facts and therefore cannot be included or considered to be part of the same cause of action within the requirement of the Hurn case.

Snell v. Potters, 88 Fed. (2d) 611, at 612 (C. C. A. 2, 1937);

Hydraulic Press Mfg. Co. v. Columbus Malleable Iron Co., 35 Fed. Supp. 603, at 605 (D. C., Ohio, 1940);

White v. Reach, 26 Fed. Supp. 77, at 79 (D. C., S. D. N. Y., 1939).

Indeed, plaintiff's right to appeal must depend upon the action for unfair competition being an independent cause of action, for otherwise no appeal would lie.

United States v. River Rouge Imp. Co., 269 U. S. 411 (1926);

Collins v. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corp., 106 Fed. (2d) 83 (C. C. A. 2, 1939).

POINT II.

This Court will strictly construe the right of the Federal Court to assume jurisdiction over actions rightfully belonging to state courts.

"It hardly needs statement that the jurisdiction as limited and fixed by Congress cannot be enlarged or extended by uniting in a single suit causes of action of which the court is without jurisdiction with one of which it has jurisdiction. Upon this point the rule otherwise prevailing respecting the joinder of causes of action in suits in equity must of course yield to the jurisdictional statute."

Mr. Justice Van Devanter speaking for a unanimous court in the case of

Nor did the new rules of Civil Procedure intend to give nor could they give the District Court this additional jurisdiction.

Rule 82 of the Rules of Civil Procedure for the District Courts of the United States.

Washington-Southern Navigation Co. v. Baltimore & Philadelphia Steamboat Co., 263 U. S. 629, p. 635 (1923).

The basis for this limitation upon the judicial power lies in the Constitution.

Constitution of the United States, Article III, Section 2.

City of Indianapolis, et al., v. The Chase National Bank, 314 U. S. 63 (1941), where this Court said at page 76:

“These requirements, however technical seeming, must be viewed in the perspective of the constitutional limitations upon the judicial power of the federal courts and of the judiciary acts in defining the authority of the federal courts when they sit, in effect, as state courts (see Madisonville Traction Company v. Mining Company, 196 U. S. 239, 255, and Ex Parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 377). The dominant note in the successive enactments of Congress relating to diversity jurisdiction is one of jealous restriction, of avoiding offense to state sensitiveness, and of relieving the federal courts of the overwhelming burden of ‘business that intrinsically belongs to the state courts’ in order to keep them free for their distinctive federal business (see Friendly, The Historic Basis of Diversity Jurisdiction, 41 Harv. L. Rev. 483, 510; Shamrock Oil Corp’n v. Sheets, 313 U. S. 100, 108-109; Healy v. Ratta, 292 U. S. 263, 270). ‘The policy of the statute (conferring diversity jurisdiction upon the district courts) calls for its strict construction. The power reserved to the states, under the Constitution, to provide for the determination of controversies in their courts may be restricted only by the action of Congress in conformity to the judiciary sections of the Constitution. Due regard for the rightful independence of state governments, which should actuate federal courts, requires that they scrupulously confine their own jurisdiction to the precise limits which the statute has defined' (Healy v. Ratta, supra, at 270). In defining the boundaries of diversity jurisdiction this court must be mindful of this guiding Congressional policy (citing cases).''

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONER-PLAINTIFF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR CERTIORARI.

The brief for Respondent in opposition to Petition for Certiorari does not attempt squarely to face the issue of whether a federal court has jurisdiction over unfair competition when it accompanies patent infringement and when there is no diversity of citizenship.

The confusion in Respondent's brief is substantially similar to the confusion in decisions by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit in applying the doctrine of Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U. S. 238, which was aptly described by Circuit Judge C. E. Clark in the following words at 127 F. (2d) 12:

“The recent decisions in this Circuit on this problem, while disclosing small variations of fact, seem to me irreconcilable on any readily apparent grounds of logic or practical expediency. I can only express the hope that the bar and the district judges are not as mystified as to the law of this Circuit as I am. One need not go back to such conflicting views as appear in L. E. Waterman Co. v. Gordon, 2 Cir., 72 F. 2d 272, 274, and Foster D. Snell, Inc., v. Potters, 2 Cir., 88 F. 2d 611, or even attempt comparison between them and the Lewis case. One need take only our decisions of the last two weeks.”

The confusion that has resulted from these obviously conflicting decisions of the Circuit Court of Appeals is apparent when consideration be given to decisions in the District Court as exemplified by recent decision of Judge Conger in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, in Carlson v. Betmar Hats, Inc., et al., Civil Action 5-73, during July, 1942, in which this District Judge reached a diametrically opposite conclusion to the Circuit Court of Appeals in the present case.

In this connection Judge Conger stated:

“The first cause of action is for patent infringement which is a federal question, the second is really based on a contract and is a non-federal question. There is not diversity of citizenship here. The plaintiff contends that even though he may fail on the patent infringement issue the Court still has jurisdiction to determine the question of unfair competition arising out of the breach of a confidential disclosure. I think not. The rule is well settled that where the two issues i.e. patent infringement and unfair competition are based upon substantially the same facts, if the first fails the court may proceed to adjudicate the second.
